A few ideas for a day out

Our condolences go out to Audrey who lost her mother this week. Our thoughts are with Audrey, Brian and their family at this sad time.

If I had a day out I would like to go on a river trip down to Greenwich . Have a wander round . Have a look at the art exhibition at the Queens palace . Have whitebait at the Trafalgar looking over the river. Maybe a drink by the embankment after returning by boat before heading home . Lyn

Having been cooped up with my three siblings for more than two weeks we are now all desperate to get out somewhere nice. Our only comfort so far has been our occasional meeting with Mr Chalk and the officious Mr Measure who are lurking somewhere in this bag. We are looking forward to visiting our favourite playgrounds again. Oh for the lush depth of green pile at Cuffley, Shillington, Letchworth, Greenwood, Northiam Harpenden, St Margaret's and so many more as yet undiscovered mats.

Love from The Woody's

P.S.

Our ultimate dream is to fly to France to see our cousins The Boules.

Bill would get some fish and chips with a beer or two and I would be on a cruise any where warm and sunny ,

If I could go out further I would go down to Bournemouth with my family and great grandchildren

my wish not so much a day out but just to go and have a lovely cup of coffee or two with friends and may be extend it to lunch as well Jill

My idea of a day out would be to take the tube to Blackfriars and then walk along the embankment on the south of the river. I would stop at Gabriel's wharf for a drink and browse around the shops. I would continue along to the National Theatre and hope that the book stalls are open, nice for a look around. I would then find somewhere tasty for lunch. After lunch I would take the tube back to London Bridge and walk around to London Glass Studio to see their lovely blown glass pieces (none of which I could afford). Back to Covent Gardens where I would try and find a good theatre show followed by dinner. Then home again to Barnet and bed. Not sure Peter will come with me, I think he would prefer a trip to the seaside with Jean.
