Alex of Blackforrest asks.

I am getting quite worried about my wife Denise; whilst we have been self-isolating, she has been encouraging me to get my bowls out and follow Brian's home practice advice. The problem is every time that I do, she insists on videoing me. Today I thought that I might do a bit of gardening, but I am now worried that she will want to video me digging and weeding as well. Dr Corvid, I feel that I am being over exposed, do you think I am getting paranoid.

Dr Corvids Reply.

I do think you are a bit paranoid. Why don't you encourage Denise in her hobby as a cinematographer? You could help by actively taking a lead roll in her next production. Why not practice a few lines? You could try, "Here's looking at you kid", or what about "I'll have what she's having". If it starts to get a bit much then you could say "Frankly, my dear, I don't give a dam" walk away for a while but don't forget to say, "I'll be back". If things are still rough, then why not offer her "A Martini. Shaken not stirred". The only other piece of advice I can give is if she wants to film you in the shower, make sure you have hidden all the knives!

Another problem will be answered in the next edition.

I would strongly endorse Alan Spicers very comprehensive Tour Guide of Orlando.

Like Alan I have been in excess of 10 times over the past 35 years. When I first went with my son ,aged about 10 we did the non stop Disney/ Universal experience. But as Alan said it is far more of a holiday just for kids. So once my son went off in the big wide World & I talked Viv, my partner into going about 25 years ago, she took some convincing as she had pre conceived ideas about Disney holidays. To the point of only telling her friends she was going to 'Florida', & omitting the Disney part.

But she was soon converted & we still love it ,& were planning to go this year.

But we now do the holiday in a different way. We do every other day at a park & drive to other locations or do a water park on the other days. We coincide this Holiday with a weekend music festival (folk/country) at a beautiful location of St Augustine. About 3 hours drive. We have stayed just outside the perimeter of Disney at Lake Buena Vista , staying at Marriott Village ,which was very convenient. But the last two times in a luxury condo at Sheraton Vistana Village (Lake Buena Vista).They are both about a 10/15 minute drive from the parks. But we feel we are not trapped by Disney food, which can be a bit basic or expensive. There are plenty of Restaurants in the Lake Buena Vista area. We particularly like the 'Red Lobster' & Chevvy's (mexican). So ,well done Alan for your great articles..
